

Hello, this is Pete Rahn with a special MoDOT Minute. MoDOT has been very successful in using recent additional revenue to improve state highways and make them safer. Now the transportation agency is taking the next step in determining where transportation in Missouri needs to be headed and what Missourians want their transportation system to look like. The initiative, called A Conversation for Moving Missouri Forward, identifies future transportation options needed to make Missouri roads safer, create jobs and improve our quality of life. It outlines five areas for improvement, including taking care of roads and bridges, enhancing public transportation, improving our interstates and providing for regional growth. Missourians are asked to weigh in on this proposal and the future of transportation in Missouri by visiting modot.org. That's been your MoDOT Minute.
